Just when the war clouds were o the horizon Henry Reuterdahl, the naval artist, called on Admiral Por-ter, chief of the Bureau of Naviga-tion, and asked him what a paint tion, and asked him what a slinger might do to help the navy. The admiral said "publicity," and when the war broke out Reuterdahl hot-footed it to Commander Bennett, the publicity office. He in charge of the publicity office. He said: "Captain, I have a schema whereby I think I can enlist every mural painter and illustrator to help the navy, and do it for nothing.
We will get the mural painters to design and paint billboards, and the illustrators to make posters, and it will not cost the Government a cent. mander Bennett looked up with an eye full of doubt and a smile which indicated "poor fellow, he is erasy with the heat, and it is only April." But because he is a man of ision and imagination and knew the value of these artists, he opened the throttle wide, and our painters nad for the selection of the boy and girl filustrators are now working hard to who are to take the parts. help the navy get men.

Draws Bluejacket From Life. E. H. Blashfield, the dean of American mural decorators, is working on a design representing Columbia calling upon the young men of the nation to enlist in the navy. bell rang and the man representing himself as Mr. Hedley asked for the manager "I am very sorry I was not at the office when your man called with the brooches," he said, "but I was unavoidably detained. In fact, I shan't return there today. Would you be good enough to send the brooches to my home in Yonkers?"
The manager said he would be delighted, and when the messenger ap-peared he sent him to Yonkers, telling him to take a receipt for the package and leave it. Ten minutes after the messenger had left the Hedley home and headed for New York minus the jewels, the Hedley telephone bell rang. The maid "Wrong Pinec."

"This is Reed & Barton's, New York," said a voice, "Has one of our messengers left a package there?" The maid replied in the affirmative.
"Well," said the voice. "It was a
